

Coloured Eggs and Bunnies

The Easter season is upon us and is filled with colored eggs, bunnies, candy, and all of the other signs that this joyful day brings to mind. Easter is a special time to gather and to celebrate, but as Christians it is also a time to reflect on another sign – the special gift of everlasting life that Jesus has given to each of us this day. As Christian stewards, we are called to be especially mindful of our Lord's gift, and how after His resurrection the disciples were instructed to go and make disciples of all the nations. Each of us has been baptized into this discipleship, and we too must heed Jesus' words.

Whenever discussions about stewardship arise, they often turn to a narrow focus on only the money aspect of stewardship. Like Easter, there is much more to stewardship, and we are challenged to see the whole picture about both. If we focus too narrowly on one idea, we may lose track of the real meaning of both stewardship and Easter.

We have been given the responsibility as Christian stewards, to respond to the mission and ministry of the Church. How each of us chooses to manage the gifts we have been given will determine if these objectives can and will be met.

As we celebrate Christ's resurrection on Easter Sunday, let the signs of Spring, of bunnies, candy coloured eggs and new life, be reminders of all of the gifts God has entrusted to our care. How are we investing our time and resources in such a way that others will hear and live?

Want to learn more about Stewardship Call your Synod Office

Coloured Eggs and Bunnies

The Easter season is upon us and is filled with colored eggs, bunnies, candy, and all of the other signs that this joyful day brings to mind. Easter is a special time to gather and to celebrate, but as Christians it is also a time to reflect on another sign – the special gift of everlasting life that Jesus has given to each of us this day. As Christian stewards, we are called to be especially mindful of our Lord's gift, and how after His resurrection the disciples were instructed to go and make disciples of all the nations. Each of us has been baptized into this discipleship, and we too must heed Jesus' words.

Whenever discussions about stewardship arise, they often turn to a narrow focus on only the money aspect of stewardship. Like Easter, there is much more to stewardship, and we are challenged to see the whole picture about both. If we focus too narrowly on one idea, we may lose track of the real meaning of both stewardship and Easter.

We have been given the responsibility as Christian stewards, to respond to the mission and ministry of the Church. How each of us chooses to manage the gifts we have been given will determine if these objectives can and will be met.

As we celebrate Christ's resurrection on Easter Sunday, let the signs of Spring, of bunnies, candy coloured eggs and new life, be reminders of all of the gifts God has entrusted to our care. How are we investing our time and resources in such a way that others will hear and live?

Want to learn more about Stewardship Call your Synod Office

Coloured Eggs and Bunnies

The Easter season is upon us and is filled with colored eggs, bunnies, candy, and all of the other signs that this joyful day brings to mind. Easter is a special time to gather and to celebrate, but as Christians it is also a time to reflect on another sign – the special gift of everlasting life that Jesus has given to each of us this day. As Christian stewards, we are called to be especially mindful of our Lord's gift, and how after His resurrection the disciples were instructed to go and make disciples of all the nations. Each of us has been baptized into this discipleship, and we too must heed Jesus' words.

Whenever discussions about stewardship arise, they often turn to a narrow focus on only the money aspect of stewardship. Like Easter, there is much more to stewardship, and we are challenged to see the whole picture about both. If we focus too narrowly on one idea, we may lose track of the real meaning of both stewardship and Easter.

We have been given the responsibility as Christian stewards, to respond to the mission and ministry of the Church. How each of us chooses to manage the gifts we have been given will determine if these objectives can and will be met.

As we celebrate Christ's resurrection on Easter Sunday, let the signs of Spring, of bunnies, candy coloured eggs and new life, be reminders of all of the gifts God has entrusted to our care. How are we investing our time and resources in such a way that others will hear and live?

Want to learn more about Stewardship Call your Synod Office